Task 3: Two brides, same dress, same registry office, same day

Two brides turned up wearing the same dress at the same registry office for weddings just an half hour apart. Emma Johal and Lisa Goodhew and who had never met before, bought their bridal gowns months before from the same shop. Then they booked at their civil registry ceremony, an hour apart, at the Bick Hotel near of Bromley. Mrs Johal, 26, who was wed first, was having her most photographs taken in the grounds that when she saw Lisa signing the marriage register. She said: "I couldn't believe in it. I started to say 'That's my dress! That's my dress!' over and over." Mrs Goodhew added: "I couldn't believe it when people were saying to me the other one bride had the same dress. You wouldn't ever have dream of that happening. I was in total shock. I have always dreamed of wearing a white dress. At first I didn't like it - how could this happen? But in the end it was all most fine."	✓	0

The women had each been bought their dress, a white full-length strapless gown, from the same shop three months apart. Lisa got hers one in November last year and Emma made her purchase in February this year. They also both wore head veils together with their dresses on. Emma, 31, an operations manager for a solicitor's firm, said: "There were some hundreds of beautiful dresses in that shop, and out of all of them we chose the same one." But it all worked out fine. Some people might have found it upsetting but although we found it hilarious."	been	Q30

Task 4: Porto da Barra, Salvador, Brazil

Sydney has Bondi, LA has Venice, Rio has Copacabana - town beaches that are been both world famous and a microcosm of their city itself. I lived in Salvador, Brazil's an oldest city, for several years ago and Porto da Barra was where I would come for an early in morning swim or a cold beer in the late afternoon. The location is being stunning, at the entrance of the magnificent "Bahia de Todos os Santos", with a small, so white colonial fort at one end and a whitewashed church sitting on a hill at the other. There's always something but going on here: small fishing boats unloading their catch, young lads diving into the sea off the old stone harbour walls, older than boys looking at girls, beach volleyball, football and tennis. As far the beach is in a bay, the water is calm and also incredibly clean and clear, so it's perfect for swimming. And in a country with all over 7,000km of east-facing coastline, Porto is one of the few view facing west, so you can watch on some fabulous sunsets.	✓	0
